Whoever on Fash/Front said I was 5'5 & 135lbs, kill yourself nigger.

Sepsis – "a life-threatening medical emergency where the body's extreme response to an infection damages its own tissues and organs."

Much has happened over the last several months, things that I probably should be writing about but obviously don't have much of an opportunity (or the mental bandwidth) to do so. To start things off on a positive note, the legacy of Hugo Chavez is officially destroyed. Decades of Marxist "society" wiped out over the course of an hour. Good riddance, it was nice seeing the temper tantrums from Lefties & Third Worldists. What's less popular in the news is that another Leftist lovechild, Rojava, has also been mostly annihilated by the JSA & will soon cease to exist. I don't actually care about Middle Eastern politics, but seeing Leftists cry about it is always fun.

I don't have anything particularly novel to say about these events, you probably already know that the US having control over Venezuela's oil supply gives it a large strategic advantage over the BRICS sphere of influence. Kurdistan's downfall will have no impact on anything that matters.

The renewed Greenland dispute is probably one of the dumbest episodes of international affairs in at least a century. Trump is an idiot for threatening a popular NATO/EU country. The EU are retarded for thinking they would ever actually win that engagement. Most political commentators are retarded for thinking there would ever actually be a kinetic conflict & that all of this wasn't just corporate-style hostile takeover rhetoric. Regardless, the event has certainly pushed along the process of Euro-American split. It will be interesting to see where this goes, especially with widespread rearmament in Europe & a still rising RW in virtually every country poised to replace the Liberal governments.

Despite political posturing, I don't think that Europe will join the Chinese sphere of influence. Closer relations are inevitable, but there's still a fairly obvious US-Euro & Russia-China split. A truly independent Europe will be nice to see after 80 years of US soft-occupation.

Fun fact, there's an American Cultural Center in Kyiv. A friend of mine visited & stumbled into a lecture about typical American HR ideology. Welcome migrants, don't call them "migets," the usual things you hear from an overweight English teacher. US Embassies & other government funded organizations have done this for decades (it's why Euro libs & US libs have the same talking points), & it seems Trump is doing what he does best (absolutely nothing) to stop it. Unfortunately, the European RW not only has to fight against their own System, but the American one too.

On the home front, the situation is getting worse by the day. One again, Minneapolis has become the center of racial conflict in the US. More importantly, this has caused a domino effect where people are realizing this fraud case is happening across the country. Thankfully, the main target of scrutiny is the Somalians. This is good, similar to the focus on Haitians shortly before the election. These are bottom of the barrel ethnicities that are universally hated because they barely qualify as human. Mexicans, for all their faults, really aren't that bad & are generally not hated as a group. Keeping the immigration debate centered around the worst of the worst like Somalis, Indians or Haitians is good optics.

Leftist attempts to shift the narrative have also thus far failed in this area, most normal people have the mental imagine of Somali run money laundering operations & Tim Walz resigning in shame.

The situation with the bitch that got domed is slightly different, their attempts to make her a martyr haven't been nearly as successful as previous ones but it's still managed to put ICE into somewhat of a bad light.

Most importantly, the Left is still well funded & organized. There's a plethora of NGO's & activist groups that are running virtually unimpeded despite openly revolutionary language & actions. Shortly following the death of Charlie Kirk (more on that later), the admin made a big fuss about declaring Antifa a terrorist organization. Unfortunately for them, this isn't possible under federal law (similar issues as to when they tried making AWD et al. "terrorist organizations"). Even if it was, it would mean virtually nothing because Antifa is just a brand. The charges could be easily skirted around by simply not using the Antifa name/logo, which is already pretty rare nowadays & hasn't been a major thing since 2018.

Instead, the admin has decided to do basically nothing. Essentially the same half measures we saw in 2020 when the Floyd riots were crushed by the feds, with basically no one involved being arrested outside of petty crimes. The admin is facing these riots more directly & with more force than back them though, both in LA last year & Minneapolis today. This has led to a potential standoff between local police/National Guard & Federal forces, on a larger scale than the Eagle Pass standoff a few years ago. I wrote about that & its potential effects here.

The phenomenon of opposition controlled states directly confronting the Feds is a powder keg that hasn't been seen on such a scale since the late Antebellum era. The LAPD or Minnesota police refusing to cooperate with ICE is one thing, Tim Walz activating the National Guard while Trump weighs deploying the Army are another thing entirely. I highly doubt we're going to see Minneapolis turn into Bakhmut, but the very notion of the US Military facing off against itself is hugely delegitimizing & paves the way for further acceleration milestones.

All of this is very third world, things that happen in some shithole country far away. We've not seen all of this in a developed Western country in many years. This is a good thing, third world governments aren't known for longevity.

The bad thing is that the GOP has almost no chance of winning in 2028. I have my doubts for the Midterms as well. The past year has been spent alienating his base & doing next to nothing about an increasingly violent Leftist color revolution in the making. Alienating European allies is widely unpopular, doing nothing about the Indian problem is unpopular. The entire Epstein fiasco was comically poorly managed. Even the Special Military Operation in Venezuela was most likely a misstep in regards to internal politics, regardless of its global strategic benefit. As predicted, he's seemingly unwilling to do what's actually necessary & instead focused on selling out what's left of the US government to the oligarchs that funded his reelection.

That leaves us with the high probability of a Dem controlled government very soon. Much like how the GOP has gradually replaced many Romney types with the MAGA crowd, the DNC has undergone some significant changes of its own in recent years. The party is now mainly composed of DSA types, those like Mamdani or AOC. For Euro readers, these types are similar to the typical Green Party or equivalent. Basically fully fledged Communists, who are openly calling for "Nuremberg Trials" for normal MAGA types. You can probably guess how they feel about actual RWers. On the bright side, they're very open about how their policies are explicitly anti-White. Their cockiness has always been a problem, but they've really owned up to it recently which is basically a free propaganda win for us.

Finally, the aftermath of the Charlie Kirk assassination has been interesting. Leftists are still openly celebrating it & often gloat about it. Despite the big talk from the admin, nothing has actually been done about it. A few people got fired for celebrating online, but that's it. No crackdowns, nothing. Surprisingly, this is a good thing because it gives the appearance that all of this is normal. Every retarded Leftoid that tries taking shots at ICE or something, without some grandiose crackdown, will simply inspire more to take matters into their own hands.

Overall, it's been a good year for accelerationists. The situation continues to escalate & 'Far-Right' content continues to gain popularity across social media, especially Twitter & Instagram. A few days ago I came across an AWD edit uploaded by some random egirl, which I found both funny & as a sign of the times. Friends have also brought up how they've observed stereotypically RW behavior in normal people far more often nowadays, like casual racism. More importantly, myself & others have noticed a more apathetic (or outright sympathetic) response to radical politics.

As an example, I wear the old black boots & red laces combo. Surprisingly, the meaning behind this is not as niche as you might expect & I've had a few people notice. Notably, a random woman working at a vape shop noted & complemented me for it. A guy at the gym noticed the Reichsadler logo on a Runic Storm shirt & asked if I was a Nazi. After saying yes his only response was "oh, cool." Obviously none of these people are going to be reading Siege or anything, but it does show how the past decade of online agitprop has normalized much of the radical politics that used to get you media attention for posting about anonymously online. It also shows how disillusioned the average person is with the standard System ideology.

We've got a long way to go, but we've made tremendous progress in the past decade or so. Those who were around in those days can tell you just how bleak the situation was. My only advice is to ride the tiger & take advantage of the shift. More importantly, take advantage of how thinly spread & chaotic Federal law enforcement is currently. If you're not a dislikable loser, consider doing some real life recruiting. Before I left country, I gave out a few copies of The Turner Diaries to more or less apolitical friends & a copy of Siege to a more politically motivated one. All of which responded positively & now send me very different reels on IG. The spoken word will always be more effective than the written one.
